The Free Constitution Undoubtedly Adopted BALTIMORE, Oct. 21.—Owing to a delay in receiving the official returns of the vote of the Maryland troops on the new constitution, there has been considerable uncertainty feit as to the result, but all uncertainty is now removed by the arrival to-night of the commissioner sent to collect the vote in Sheridan's army. The new constitution has been clearly adopted by a majority of not less than three hundred. Several organizations, including the 3d regiment, in Western Virginia, and the 3d cavairy, at Fort Gaines, Mobile Bay, it is expected, will considerably increase the majority.

FINANCIAL.-Gold opened at 211%, and fell to 206% under the reports from Gen. Sheridan's army. At 3 p. m. the rate was 207 %. Stocks are irregular, and not in favor with speculators for an advance. Government securities are strong, and in some cases higher. Coupon 5.20's sold up to 95%, an advance of 1% per cent. Railroad Bonds were offered sparingly, and sold at full prices. There was a large business in Railroad Shares, but prices were not sustained, though great efforts were made in several stocks. The military situation and the approach of the Presidential election discourage large operations, and prudent people are for the moment out of the market. In Bank shares and all solid investment securi-ties the amount of business is trifling, and sellers are able to get full prices. At the Second Board better prices were had, but there was no large demand. Gold closed at 208 x 209. Stocks were stronger after the Second Board, but the market closes without spirit. The first payment on account of the new loan has had no perceptible effect upon the money market, but it is by no means certain that the $20,000,000 to be paid prior to November 1, will be as readily met. From this date nothing but legal-tenders or National Bank notes can be used, and neither are in excess. On call money is freely offered at 7 per cent. and less is said about 5 per cent loans. THE BATTLE AT CEDAR CREEK.

tails of the batt'e of Oedar Creek, not included in the official reports heretofore published.

Shortly before daylight this morning, while the Army of the Shenandoah, dreamless of danper was soundly sleeping, a feint picket assault.

A rapid and continuous discharge of sentinel muskets extended from thence along our whole front toward the left, when suddenly, with scarcely a moment s warning, the rebel infantry, massed there the night before, advanced against General Crook's position in solid columas, pouring in a flerce fire on flank and front. Only a portion of our troops manned the breastworks when the assault commenced. It was so energetic and deadly as to break the heir breastworks, into which the enemy came flooding like a sea, swarming on, yelling, driving all before them; they entered the encampments in rear of the works where soldiers, scarcely awakened, were actually rising from their blankets. To save the aritilery at the breastworks became a desperate object when the assault was first discovered, but the nature of the ground rendered this next to impossible. Battery B, 6th Penasylvani, six guns, were captured entire. By superhuman efforts all but one gun of the 5th regular battery were saved, leaving seven guns in the hands of the epemy In the meanwhile the latter had still advanced, completely tearing the left flank of the army and were nearing the pike on the heights above. The whole army was by this time fronted by the 2d division of the enemy, which had moved up the pike and attacked it fiercely in front and flank with musketry and artillery. front, and with withering volleys forced it back in retreat.

The entire 19th corps, abandoning all its works, now fought retreating and partially broken. The scenery of the field at this juncture was fairly appalling. The left of thearmy completely turned, half the army of Western Virginia flying in dismay through the fog, its camps, and the greater part of its camp material, in possession of the enemy, the remnant, together with part of the provisional division and Colonel Kitching, which had been camped in the rear, fighting still for the possession of the pike. The Nineteenth corps fighting more or less stubbornly, falling back and constantly losing in stragglers, the entire country about Middletown and beyond, in rear, poluted with a demoralized soldiery; the crack of rebel musetry, sweeping farther up on the left toward Middletown; hurrying wagons, ambulances, caissons: the hiss and explosion of the enemy's shells from batteries planted in front of the 19th corps; the appearance of deteat, impending disaster almost everywhere, might have shook the hope of fanaticism itself. General Wright, was not a whit discouraged. The moment that the Army of Western Virginia and the Nineteenth Corps were found to be definitely falling back, went an order to a whole line some distance in order to connect with the cavalry, who were just advancing to drive the enemy from the pike on the left, and hold the field at that point. This retrograde movement was accomplished without loss. The enemy followed it up closely and vengefully. Their bullets rained upon the artillery, killing off horses and men, and embarrassing the attempt of the artillerymen to move their guns to the rear. The guns were fought splendidly-fought everywhere until the last mo-ment, when it was found they could not be removed. Two of Capt. Stevens' guns were lost, two of Lamb's, one of McKnight's and two of Adams's. Capt. Adams, with a corporal and man, stood by their piece when all other support had left, and until every horse was shot and the corporal and man were shot beside him He was then forced to retire. Col. Tompkins, chief of artillery, while assisting to remove one of the guns of Cowan's battery,

When the lines had reached a crest just to the right and rear of Middletown, where a second stand was made, and when two ter afic charges of the enemy were repulsed, nearly every field officer in the First Division of the Sixth Corps was wounded. Gen. Ricketts, commanding the corps, had been so badly wounded that he was forced to leave the field. Gen. Bidwell, commanding the 2d Brigade 2d Division, was mortally wounded by a shell, which tore his left shoulder to pieces and shattered the left arm of Capt. Orr, one of his aides. Col. Hamlin, commanding the 1st brigade, (Upton's) 1st division, was wounded in two places, through the thigh and shoulder, but did not leave the field until afternoon. Gen. Getty, commanding the 2d division, had a horse shot under him. Col. Penrose, commanding the Jersey brigade, was badly wounded in the right arm. Col. Higginbotham, of the 65th New York, had been killed. Col. Campbell, of the 15th Jersey, wounded. Maj. Bow.

The battle line of the infantry was reformed on the crest alluded to, just after Gen. Torbert, with the cavalry, had swept on the left, pitching into the enemy in that direction off the pike, establishing his line in conjunction with it, and holding his own against some of the fiercest shelling that was ever showered on devoted soldiers. At this time, about 10 a. m., although the appearance of things in the rear was still not that generally seen in the rear of a victorious army, and although an appearance of retreat prevailed on some portions of the lines, in front, the army had for the first time during the day so far won a victory over its opening disasters as to have disposed a consistent and wieldy front towards its foe, holding its own in the main against further attack. The results of the contest were otherwise gloomy. We had been surprised and driven out of a splendid position; had lost multiply-ingly in prisoners; had lost twenty-four pieces of artillery, thirty-four ambulances, including all the medical wagons and medical supplies of the 19th corps, and several headquarter wagons. We had yielded more than two miles of the battle-field to the enemy; many of our finest officers were killed and disabled. and contented himself with a lively use of artillery. At this moment a faint cheer echoed along the line in the rear. General Sheridan, who had ridden posthaste from Winchester, was apthusiasm. Beginning at the left of the line, he rode along the whole front of the army, waving his hat amid uproarious cheers. Retreat was stopped in an instant from that time till three p. m. Every nerve was strained to get the army into an offensive position, and at 3 o'clk the whole army, the Sixth corps in the centre, the Nineteenth corps on the right, Crook's com-mand on the left, Merritt's cavalry division on the extreme left, Custer's division on the extreme right, made a magnificent resistless charge,

The enemy had actually begun to throw up breastworks, and was preparing to go into camp, when this charge was made. He was driven back at a double-quick through Middle-town, across Cedar run, where he came from,

Scarcely a minute elapsed when its columns were seen moving majestically by the left flank straight into the heart of the conflict. Opening a moment for the passage of stragglers, its line closing up again before the assaults that still had not been stayed, but like willow withes, as the tempest struck it, did not break.
